

2RV

20.4 (Summer 2016)

The 2River View

20.4 (Summer 2016)

2River

www.2River.org

7474 Drexel DR • University City • MO • 63130 • USA

new poems by

Jo Ann Baldinger, Taylor Bond

Matthew Scott Freeman, Guiseppe Getto, Alex Greenberg

M. Nasorri Pavone, Carlos Reyes

Jane Stephens Rosenthal, Danielle Sellers

William Waters, Wendy Wisner

The 2River View, 20.4 (Summer 2016)

The 2River View

20.4 (Summer 2016)

About the Photographer

Sarah Katharina Kayß is an internationally published photographer, blogger and poet. She is winner of the manuscript award of the German Writers Association (2013) for her poetry and essay collection Ich mag die Welt, so wie sie ist (Munich, Allitera, 2014). Kayß edits the bilingual literary magazine The Transnational and is currently a final year PhD student in the War Studies Department of King's College London.

About 2River

Since 1996, 2River has been a site of poetry and art, quarterly publishing The 2River View and occasionally publishing individual authors in the 2River Chapbook Series. 2River is also the home of Muddy Bank, the 2River blog.

Richard Long

2River

ISSN 1536-2086

www.2River.org

www.muddybank.org

www.facebook.com/2RiverPoetry

2river.tumblr.com

@2weetRiver

ISSN 1536-2086

The 2River View, 20.4 (Summer 2016)

Contents

Jo Ann Baldinger
Kiting

Taylor Bond
Our Father

Matthew Scott Freeman
College!

My God Is Not a Platonic God, Though

Giuseppe Getto
Different Geometry
Pioneering—July 22, 1838; Waycross, Georgia

Alex Greenberg
Drainage

M. Nasorri Pavone
Blessing
Close-up

Alex Greenberg is a teenage poet whose work has been published or accepted for publication in The Cortland Review, The Florida Review, Puerto Del Sol, Salt Hill, and Third Coast.

M. Nasorri Pavone is a Pushcart Prize nominee whose poems have appeared in The Cortland Review, DMQ Review, New Letters, River Styx, and elsewhere. She is also a playwright and lives in Venice, California.

Carlos Reyes is the author of Keys to the Cottage: Stories from the West of Ireland (2015) and Pomegranate, Sister of the Heart (2012). His most recent book of translations is Poems of Love & Madness; Poemas de amor y locura; Selected Translations (2013).

Jane Stephens Rosenthal is a poet and actress living in Los Angeles. Last year she wrote several of the librettos for the widely reviewed Hopscotch: A Mobile Opera. She is currently in pre-production for her film No One Ever Said They Wanted To Be A Heroin Addict When They Grew Up.

Danielle Sellers has an MFA from the University of Mississippi where she held the John Grisham Poetry Fellowship. Her poems have appeared in The Cimarron Review, Poet Lore, Prairie Schooner, Smartish Pace, Subtropics, and elsewhere. Her first book, Bone Key Elegies, was published by Main Street Rag.

William Waters is an associate professor, in the Department of English at the University of Houston Downtown. Along with Sonja Foss, he is coauthor of Destination Dissertation: A Traveler's Guide to a Done Dissertation. His research and teaching interests are in writing theory and modern grammar.

Wendy Wisner is the author of two books of poems (CW Books), and her writing has appeared in such publications as Bellevue Literary Review, Brain, Child Magazine, Literary Mama, Minnesota Review, Prairie Schooner, Spoon River Review, The Washington Post, and Verse Daily.

The 2River View, 20.4 (Summer 2016)

Contributors

Jo Ann Baldinger writes poems and practices yoga. Her poems have appeared in Blue Mesa, Burningword, Cirque, Monarch Review, Stickman Review, Verdad, and White Whale.

Taylor Bond is a 2014-2015 Lannan Fellow, a copywriter at Tokyo Journal, and a freelance photographer. Her work has appeared, or is forthcoming, in Belle Reve Literary Journal, The Foundling Review, and Underwater New York, among others.

Matthew Scott Freeman holds an MFA from the University of Missouri--St Louis, where he was given the graduate poetry prize. His fifth book, Everything I Love Restored, was recently published by Coffeetown Press.

Giuseppe Getto is an Assistant Professor of English at East Carolina University. His work can be found in Eclectica, Reed, Slant, Sugarhouse Review, and elsewhere. His chapbook Familiar History is now available from Finishing Line Press.

Carlos Reyes
Man Walking Cow
Where a Ditch Has Been Opened in the Earth

Jane Stephens Rosenthal
—
for Laura

Danielle Sellers
March Letter, Four Years Later To Be Done With Desire

William Waters
Beside the Jukebox
Trying Time

Wendy Wisner
I died, and lost flight

Did you believe me?
I learned how to hold the letters in the roof of my mouth.

Then I brought you to bed while outside a moth pressed her terrible wings against our window.

By terrible I mean precise—how I slice through the living room, a cup of boiling tea in my fist—

And you obediently waiting for me.

Are the children asleep?
Do you believe in soulmates?

I died
 and lost

California
where there is no rain, only flight. When I asked our son about death he said, you get shiny, then you get yellow, then you get broken—

and he pushed his tiny yellow school bus under the radiator until winter was over.

Wendy Wisner

I died, and lost flight

Yesterday felt like summer—our son tramped through the field, a matchbox car in each hand.
I am trying to locate the spaces between dream and waking:
his fingers
as he plays them open against bald blue sky.
Sometimes I feel a rash spread across my body
to yours.
But really
I'm walking barefoot across the lawn. It's June.
She's wearing the sundress that makes her look pregnant.
I don't step on the bee. She doesn't lose the baby: her mind isn't twisted into spider webs.
(Stop. Listen to the rain puncturing the roof.)
I died, and lost flight—
words from last night's dream. I told no one.
I was a child.

Jo Ann Baldinger

Kiting

Turns out I'm not brave enough to be a bird to do farewells the way they do, take their leave without the bulky parcels of regret.
At Manzanita Bay I fly a diamond kite, my proxy partner in the dance of weightlessness played out through this thread, this wooden spool trusting that the line will hold.
Hoping to be singed with something like electric fire.
Each launch is clumsy, unpredictable, each landing violent in a different way.
I gather the broken pieces, all I can find, and begin the slippery mule work of trying to put them back together.
Learning to assess the losses.
Some bright salty days the kite opens gleefully to every random current, flicking long ribbons down to the shore where the mad puppy races on the sand.
His ears whipple inside out and he's barking at the kite—Come back! or Take me with you!

Taylor Bond

Our Father

Father, you said,

I have watched the sun wash the windows while I waited for you. I pried the claws off of lobsters, the cracked red shellac sounded like bullets, and I did not move. There is such a fine line between fear and pride. The light from the kitchen, a caution tape on linoleum tile. I tossed the remains to the trash and treasured the meat, the tender pulp, like cloth between my fingers. How long have I waited?

In your absence I have become a predator, foul mouthed female. My mouth spews, aseptic syllables, heavy noise on sodden tongue, teeth licking flesh; like glue against fire, I stick to what I know is dangerous.

Here, a blade. There, a hand.
Someone reaches out for me and I wish to lick their wounds until they know the taste of poison, until they love it more than cotton sheets and pencil shavings, more than the warm prisons of their own lungs.
Sweet possessions. A symphony.

William Waters

Trying Time

A fool is nothing but a man undone, by trying time; and if in trying time he finds the sun as wanton as black night lacking mercy, love, or light—then let his abuse be of use to you, for what's a fool to do?
Who will not try time, time tries until with every truth the plaintiff lies, as dust must, when broken from the bone sanctified and cast beneath a stone.

William Waters

Beside The Jukebox

at a bar
over in the corner,

a man has a red dinner jacket on his tongue;

the woman with him
has gunk
between her teeth.

the dinner jacket
keeps twisting
his words to catch
the light;

the gunk
picks her teeth.

nobody's dancing
but someone's picking songs.

Taylor Bond

father, I have waited for you.

I have pressed my ear, soft and hirsute, to dirt to listen to the thunder of your footsteps from a distance. I have become a carbon creature, a testament to life like all of the others. I have excommunicated the bees because they know nothing of loneliness. My scabs have blossomed into roses on my knees so that I am pretty while I kneel.

Is this what I have become?

Maybe love is denying yourself everything you think you deserve.

Do you need the vitality of your own heart, selfish beast?

There is no stability in happiness; balance done in by scalpels against stems, cutting the seeds from the core, spilling everywhere; fierce progeny, do not cut yourself into children, or let loose your dreams like spores. Your hopes cannot infect other.

*father, you do not support these illegitimate dreams.
Cast off your prosthetic love. Make a minister of me.*

Matthew Scott Freeman

College!

Yes, I confess I figured I knew how it felt to have to dig your own grave. My mistake had been reading up on Crowley and alchemy. And this was back when stoners would say twelve trips would leave you legally insane. I was so freaked out I could only sneak out at night to buy cookies at Walgreens.

Then one morning as I lay stiff and prone Lesbia came in looking so sad and said I should come to breakfast. My father was somewhere way far off and the dining hall was gravid with origins. The kids were so colorful. My brain was burning and I stared so hard at this blond girl in the corner that her syringe actually burst.

Later I had to impress my professor. I paced confidently around my room and held on tight to the phone but I gasped when a crow flew in. My professor said I should come see her. Then I threw up. I had the overwhelming guilt of the seer.

Danielle Sellers

March Letter, Four Years Late

When I gave birth to my daughter, you sent a postcard of Gwyneth Paltrow and her mother, taken by Annie Leibovitz.

In the photo, Blythe Danner spoons her daughter, hands cinched about the waist she made in her body. Gwyneth's eyes are downcast in ecstasy.

I thought you'd enjoy this touching mother-daughter scene, was all you wrote.

My stone-faced husband couldn't understand why I sobbed for days after, remembering how much you'd make me laugh:

performing Mr. Roboto in your kitchen after cooking a dinner of lentils on your electric hot plate, teaching me wrestling moves in the empty living rooms of our graduate school apartments, your body pinning mine every time.

And how, when I told you I was marrying him, you warned me not to, because men after war were never the same.

How they closed up their hearts in the pine coffins of their bodies.

Danielle Sellers

To Be Done With Desire: After Seeing You in Boston

Banishing love isn't a fix.
—D.A. Powell's Corydon & Alexis, Redux

And yet, here we are mid-thirties with our bellies slumping.
You describe yourself as sickly, withered, no longer the young college wrestler who took me out for ethnic food on payday. And me?

I've grown more robust with time, my hips spill over, take more than their share.
Thick swatches of gray cloak my temples.
No more long red fingernails tapping the bulbs of wine glasses, no more lilting laughter late into the night.

After all the years between our former selves and now, even now, how you've grown pale, your reading glasses mark the bridge of your nose, sweaters hang loose on your shoulders that have stooped over books in libraries all these years, even now I still want what I wanted then. Maybe even more.

Now that I know what it is to be without you.

Matthew Scott Freeman

My God is Not a Platonic God, Though

I was walking up Delmar out of lockdown to get my beautifully meaningful soda when I saw a pretty girl coming out of the light and into the shadow and I passed her by and when I came into the soft light I stopped and knelt and prayed for mercy and I was not quite actually a part of the real world and talk about the failure to reach the impossible thing like catching a catnap on my ex-girlfriend's grave and an evil spirit coming in and out of me and body language and the CIA and the mirror and trying not to be a loser and gone beyond girls and I said this to the mirror I said Father Good when Lesbia comes back I promise to love her just like an angel would.

Guiseppe Getto

Different Geometry

Creationism reigns so much so in my hometown that the curve of highways leading outward is called lonely. Extended families, related but distant, crawl from the shallow end of diversion ditches come summer, their wet trunks hanging between their legs like vestigial webs—and there's always that cousin. The one with fingers or toes or nostrils that don't separate right, the tree without branches that somehow struggles upright against every gale and thaw. And spring brings with it challenges unique to living nowhere.
Once a third cousin hit Old River Road near the irrigation junction going sixty.
Did the fault of sunlight on black ice define where he reached, or the blanket excuse he lived to use from two wheels, his gaze permanently careful?
Many times, you see, we are just interested in the image of the curve, in the parabolic sweep of mountains that drew generations of wagon trains like comets through the eye of a needle.

Jane Stephens Rosenthal

for Laura

Here there is coffee and break and milk.

No longer needing to make the self an offering.

It rains.

— Pioneering—July 22, 1838, Waycross, Georgia

He never took care of the blood.
It didn't bother
her.

She stole
the shirt.
She wore it.

Bit by bit
the moon left them.

She took her underwear off.

He put them
in his pocket.
He brought them
to her.

She drove past
the battlefields.

He slipped in to her dreams.
Hand underneath
her dress.

He slipped out.

His cat showed up with kittens.

Fear of a weak frame will set you joining.
You'll find lap keying the easiest joinery, but also the weakest—the logs breathe and water enters the joint making treenails or tenons necessary.
They say their mothers first go home out here to the whistle of branch holding wind and trunks whittled as teeth.
Consider the employ of stone, but brick if it can be had will breathe without soaking, especially when snow sparks through the gaps like thistle-down.
Employ axe, auger, and cross-cut saw for windows and the door once the wall timbers are set. You can do without as window techniques can indeed be vexing, but consider the lesson of the Wildes.
They say the Wildes were aroused last Tuesday from inside their shoddy walls several times by two yard dogs.
Had they proper windows they might have seen shapes in the treeline.
It's true yard dogs, especially those of Shepherd descent, will alert as they no doubt spilled Wildes himself from the straw mat bed handed down by his mother. They say only Mary Anne was found still clinging to the dead baby and calling for water from the undergrowth where she hid, but immediately upon drinking she, too, fell dead.
The lesson is always the same, out here. It was Daniel Stong of Toronto who seated wooden wedges, for instance, which, founded properly of moss and clay, allows the wall timbers to sit almost no matter how hard the wood or how straight.

Alex Greenberg

Drainage

Christina Madrazo, a transexual immigrant, was placed in solitary confinement in May 2000 where she was raped twice by a prison guard. Dissident Voice

there was a day you couldn't stop swallowing you were that empty

a little girl in your throat, trembling you wanted so badly to slip your thumb in her mouth and let her suck on it, her tongue like a virgin lake bathing a body for the first time.

all of the guards who looked at you like a piece of food fingered from their teeth coming back to memory.

no he will not watch his mouth when he enters your body or remember your name.

he will spit on your welcome mat, make you forget how soft breathing can be.

Carlos Reyes

Where a Ditch Has Opened in the Earth

A standing black plastic bag--- small bare feet beneath it then movement
a child at play . . .

Blind inside her plastic garb she drifts
to within inches
of the precipice

Her sari clad mother in the ditch itself scrapes red dirt
into a shallow copper bowl offers it up a sacrifice to the sun

Carlos Reyes

Man Walking Cow

He has saved her from four lanes of traffic on the Inner Ring Road of Domluru brushed her black coat to a sheen, and dressed her up, starting at the tip of curved upward horns, she could hook the yellow moon with, to her well-trimmed hooves that were the nails of a princess, wrapping her in blood red, and green yarns, elegant silk saris, and bleeding madras.

He leads her like a drunken bride though the posher neighborhoods showing her the quieter worlds, humbly honoring her, his means of livelihood, or simply to shame those who look down on him and his cow from higher windows.

Alex Greenberg

by the third year you didn't have enough hands to pray with so you stopped praying.

you gossiped about your own body to whoever would listen stood in the center of the cell, your mouth opening and closing opening and closing.

you knew no other way to ask for help.

what else to do but shatter the vessel?
can you really call its sacrifice after all that has happened?

M. Nasorri Pavone

Blessing

Mrs. Woods sailed the long ship of her '60s Cadillac down Trowbridge Avenue. A little girl playing on that street would wait for her to wave, then wave back. Mrs. Wood's wave was always the same: church lady in a small town parade. She kept her car window raised. The girl liked her puffed helmet of white hair. Did it feel like cotton candy? Her parents talked to no one, threw lunch bags with feces from her training potty onto the lawns of other neighbors they hated. From next door Mrs. Woods had to have heard the father's fall-down fits, his hurling, the mother pleading. But Mrs. Woods never knocked on their door or called the police. She was hard of hearing, a most fortunate hardness. In the car she lifted her hand: a noble Calla lily gloved in gentility, a peace flag held up to ward off the squalor that stewed from the garden of waist-high weeds, the peeling paint, the parked hearse of the house, what couldn't help but smell of Stay away and Run for your life, and that's how the girl received her blessing.

M. Nasorri Pavone

Close-up

When she imagines herself Anna Magnani in a foreign film, it's on a hound dog day of vodka nips, two liquor store trips, of running into the street to stop a car from crushing a dying pigeon flailing in the crosswalk, its one able wing. It deserves a different death, she thinks, as screeching tires underscore that thought. She goes home a candle puddle of Roman pride after the ransacking and no banquet, after playing the peasant in happy face, the congenial whore with iron thigh grip. Tomorrow the old shoe will fail her with another hard and public fall. In the close-up, Anna throws her head back to laugh as the camera comes in tightly on her mouth, so wide a way in, you, like the others who saw the movie, catch a glimpse of her rumbling tongue and guillotine of teeth, the glistening cavern of her howling at adversity which distracts from her brown eyes burning black.